Justine Lynch advises clients in branding protection, management and enforcement.

Having trained with Reddie & Grose, Justine qualified as a trade mark attorney in 2017. Her academic background was originally in Sport and Exercise Science and later converted to Law. It was following a summer internship with a global sports agency where she worked with brands and athletes, that Justine decided to pursue a legal career in brand protection.

Justine advises clients who operate in many different industries, including those in the sport, automotive, pharmaceutical and technology sectors.

She has experience in brand creation including clearing marks for use and filing strategies. Justine has particular experience in handling contentious matters including opposition and appeal cases at both the UK and EU Intellectual Property Offices.

Justine is keen triathlete and skier. She spends her free time mainly training for and racing long distance triathlon in the UK and overseas. She has more bikes than most, but still not enough...
